I. Declaration

The declaration is used to state that the thesis has been composed by you and either that the work is your own or if you have been a member.

II. Acknowledgement

The acknowledgement is used to thank any organizations, groups, or individuals who have been involved with your study/research.

III. Contents page

The table of contents is the guide to your thesis, so it must be accurate and logical. You are expected to follow the format outlined in Figure 3.

IV. Abstract and key words

The abstract, which should not exceed 300 words, is to give a brief overview of the thesis. The abstract should:

- give a brief background to the study/research including its objectives
- outline the research method used
- discuss the main findings

The key words are not more than 5 words and/ or phrases.

V. List of abbreviations and/or List of figures and tables

Each table, chart, figure, map, illustration or paper clipping used in your thesis should be numbered and labeled in the text. These should be listed and numbered following the abstract.

VI. Main body of the thesis

The thesis length should be in the range of 12,000 – 16,000 words (40 – 60 pages), not including the References and Appendices.

The main body of the thesis should follow the following overall thesis structure, subject to any variation which should be approved by the Supervisor in consultation with the Faculty.

PART III. CONCLUSION

Introduction

This part is to frame the thesis for its readers. The introduction should provide:

- A brief description of the topic including any background that might be necessary for the general reader to understand the research area
- A statement as to why the topic is worth researching or why you found it interesting
- A statement of your research objectives or hypothesis
- An overview of the rest of the thesis/An outline of the thesis

Literature review

The purpose of reviewing existing information is to find what is already known about the topic. It is advisable to answer the following questions in a literature review:

- What is the present state of knowledge regarding the topic under consideration?
- How are the studies related to the one being proposed?
- What is the quality of the studies reviewed?
- How will the proposed study contribute to the existing literature?

Literature review is not a comprehensive evaluation of all literature related to a topic. While you need to read widely to clarify many issues for yourself, only a careful selection of narrowly relevant materials which pertain immediately to the research question will be covered in the literature review itself.

Methodology

The method employed in your research should be explicitly detailed, including the subjects of the study, the research instruments employed, data collection procedure, the strengths and limitations of the methodology employed, etc.

Findings/results and discussion

This part should consist of a discussion of the findings/results of the study focusing on the question posed in the thesis. In addition, it should serve to compare your results to previous research findings (i.e. do the present findings reflect/refute previous findings?). You should also demonstrate an awareness of the limitations of your study in this part.

Conclusion

Following are the key components which should not be omitted in the conclusion:

- summary of question posed
- summary of findings
- summary of main limitations of the study at hand
- details of possibilities for related future research

Remember: The conclusion is not the place to introduce new insights into the question at hand. All ideas and thoughts should have been already mentioned at this stage. New thoughts should refer to future research questions.

VII. General document guidelines

- Margins: top: 2,5 cm; down: 2,5 cm; left: 3,5 cm; right: 2 cm (Size A4 210x297mm)
- Font: Times New Roman size and type: 13-pt

- Spacing: 1.5 lines throughout the paper, including the abstract, body of the thesis, and references
- Alignment: Justify (creating even left and right margins)
- Paragraph indentation and spacing: indentation 5-7 spaces (one tab); spacing: 6 pt
- Place page numbers from declaration until conclusion part. Set page numbers from 01 and put them at the center of the Header of the paper.
- The numbering of tables, charts and graphs must be associated with the ordinal number of the chapter. For example, figure 1.2. means the 2nd figure of chapter 1. The title of the table is shown above the table. The title of the figure is shown below the figure.
- References in the thesis must be cited in the order listed in the list of references and enclosed in square brackets. For example: (Nunan, 2020: 201) [1].
For documents cited from different sources, the number of each document is enclosed in independent square brackets and in ascending order: ... [2], ... [4], ... [9].

VIII. Appendix(es)

Documenting sources

IX. References

Citations and references should follow the APA styles (if there are minor modifications, they should be consistent).

You must include a list of references at the end of your thesis. Remember to list only the works that you have referred to in your thesis.

The documents are arranged in different languages and must be sorted in ascending alphabetical order.
